A Young Man in Trouble / Shab Fi Ma'zaq

Director's Note

My experience with my family has always made me feel fear and anxiety. The idea of family became frightening because I saw my relationship with them as a source of questioning what "family" even means. I realized this when my father was imprisoned. My brothers went back to addiction, and I was angry because they were escaping confrontation. Later I realized I was doing the same, hiding inside my anger. I started noticing how similar my father felt to every figure of authority around me. That similarity scared me. The chaos and slow escape of my generation makes me feel like I'm becoming what I hate. This moment feels defining, collective, and harsh. These conflicts come from a middle-class family that collapsed and took on new, unexpected traits.

Synopsis

Selim, a wedding video editor from a conservative family, has always lived through other people's happiness. On a family beach trip, he swims too far, and when he looks back, the shore is gone. He surfaces in another sea, where a stranger named Anas welcomes him like an old friend. Then Selim meets Anas's mother. When she turns, he sees his own mother. Selim longs to stay, unaware of what this life cost.

Beaufort Scale

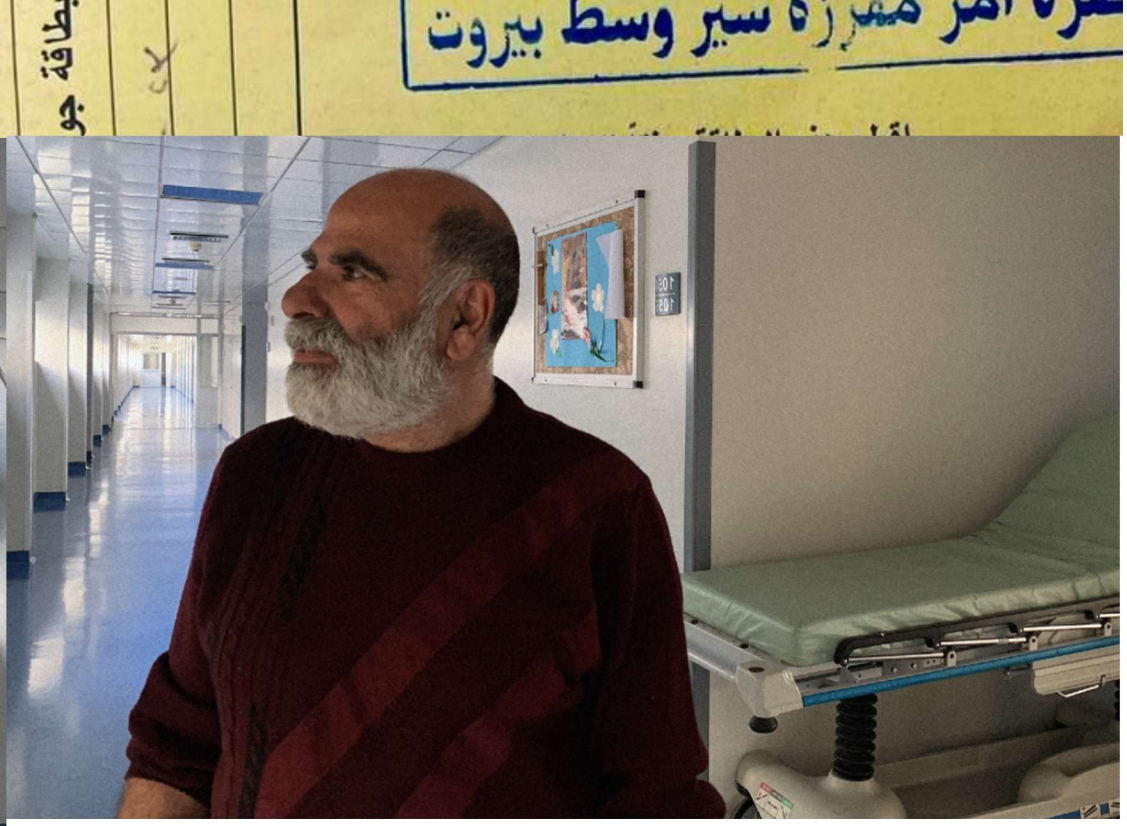

Director's Note

I've always been fascinated by brotherhood and the idea that someone can enter your life for only a few days, yet leave as if you've lost a lifelong companion. With Beaufort Scale, I want to explore that feeling alongside another impossible experience: briefly belonging to a different version of your own family, only to have it disappear forever. More than a film about parallel worlds, I hope it becomes an emotional experience about connection, loss, and returning home carrying memories that no one else can understand.

Ahmed Samir

is an Egyptian filmmaker from Alexandria. His short films have screened internationally, including at the Cairo International Film Festival and the New York African Film Festival at Lincoln Center. His latest works explore memory, identity, and the emotional landscapes of everyday life through intimate, character-driven stories. 'Beaufort Scale' is his debut feature film.

Before Now, Later

Director’s Note

‘Before Now, Later’ is my sixth feature film, focusing on a social and structural aspect of what unfolds in Lebanon regarding system dysfunction to a dizzying measure. The film is separated into two comas: the one the main character's daughter is in, and the one the country is in. Who will wake up first?

Karim Kassem

is an award-winning Lebanese director and cinematographer. In a five-year period, he has made ‘Only The Winds’ (2020), ‘Octopus’ (2021), ‘Thiiird’ (2023), ‘Moondove’ (2024) and ‘Pipes’ (2025). His sixth film is in development.

Synopsis

Pedro, 38, is sent to a remote clinic in Finland suffering from a rare syndrome that — baffling the scientific community — affects only people born in late December and early January. With no known treatment and death almost certain within four to six months, Pedro surrenders to the clinic's rigid routines and begins to question whether his own cure still matters.

Director's Note

We live in a time of polarisation, fake news and histrionic leadership. Humanity is becoming unwell — and failing to reflect on its own condition. Capricorn Syndrome continues the thematic exploration of my short film Blue Bird, centring on mental illness, anxiety and personality disorders, concerns I have navigated personally through years of psychotherapy.
The film unfolds in a linear, minimalist, hypnotic and cold register, close to Lanthimos or Spike Jonze. Sound, orchestral music and Finland's changing light become structural elements, shaping each emotional state.

Miguel Munhá

(b. 1989) holds two Master's degrees in Cinematic Development from ESTC Lisbon and in Cinematography from ESCAC Barcelona. His short films and documentaries have screened at Warsaw Film Festival, IndieLisboa, Tate Modern, Beijing, and Hong Kong, Bulgaria, among others. His docu-fiction Blue Bird premiered in Official Competition at Warsaw 2025.

Director's Note

I didn't start filming because I wanted to make a film. I started because I didn't know what else I could do.
When the war began, my daughter Sila was eighteen months old. She couldn't understand the explosions, but she felt my fear. Before protecting her from the war, I had to hide my own fear from her.
I created Super Sila, not as a cinematic idea, but as a language of imagination between us. Through the camera, I documented my attempt to remain steady for my daughter. Perhaps imagination is the last line of defense against despair.

Director's Note

As a Tunisian and Arab woman with a Western passport, I see it as my responsibility to bridge worlds and give voice to those rarely seen on screen. Through Donia, an ordinary woman driven to extraordinary choices, I explore motherhood, identity, and moral courage. The film asks who defines right and wrong when legality and justice diverge. Ultimately, it is about finding the courage to reject the role society has written for you, even when the cost is everything you hold dear.

She graduated from Teatro Azione Acting School in Italy and completed a short screenwriting course at the Royal Central School of Speech and Drama. She has starred in several local and international films, earning multiple awards for Best Actress. She is currently developing her first feature-length film.

Director's Note

Through my uncle Serge's extraordinary conviction that he owns a Van Gogh, I explore the fragile boundary between objective truth and personal belief. Rather than questioning authenticity, the film examines how art exists through perception, memory, and imagination. Serge's encounter with an expert becomes a dialogue between intuition and knowledge, opening a space where doubt is embraced instead of resolved. By filming him, I confront my own relationship to art and ask what truly gives an artwork its value: proof, or the emotions it awakens.
